REQUIRED READINGS

The reading list includes required readings and supplementary readings. Supplementary readings include references to works that will facilitate further study of a particular topic. Supplementary sections also include related work by faculty in the Department of Sociology at the University of Toronto. Students must read all 184 required reading units plus 25 supplementary reading units selected from any two topics, for a total of 209 reading units. Although there are some exceptions, units are typically determined as follows:

- 1 large book > 100 pages = 5 reading units
- Small books and parts of larger books = 2-3 reading units, depending on number of pages assigned
- 1 journal article or book chapter = 1 reading unit

SUB AREAS

The list is divided into seven large sub areas:

1. Power and the Political [22 units]
2. State Formation and Nationalism [31 units]
3. Social Cleavages, Parties and Voting [29 units]
4. Comparative Political Economy and the Welfare State [28 units]
5. Civil Society, Democracy and Citizenship [23 units]
6. Social Movements [28 units]
7. Globalization [23 units]

3. SOCIAL CLEAVAGES, PARTIES AND VOTING

Political parties were once thought to reflect the class composition of society, and individual party preference was thought to be determined largely by class position. In recent decades, however, the class bases of parties and voting patterns have been called into question. More emphasis has been placed on changing values as determinants of party choice and on the role that parties themselves play in shaping political life.

6. SOCIAL MOVEMENTS

Much recent controversy in the study of social movements centres on (1) the relationships among structure, culture and agency and (2) the causal weight that should be accorded each domain in the mobilization of social movements, the crystallization of social movement strategy and the level of success of social movements.

7. GLOBALIZATION

Required Readings (23 units)

The readings in this module encourage investigation into how social life, the state, the economy, and social dissent have changed in the globalization period (roughly dated from the late 1970s onwards). At the same time students investigate new features of this period (e.g., neoliberalism, transnational social movements), they are encouraged to simultaneously examine historical continuity, and be wary of tendencies to abandon analyses of traditional political actors like the state and social classes. Key concepts: neoliberalism, cosmopolitanism, risk society, transnational social movements/activist networks, global civil society, state and world economy
