One Course Instructor Position

SOC352H1S - New Topics in Sociology: Social Psychology of Work

The Social Psychology of Work course will explore some of the main theoretical and research-based themes that relate to the individual and social experiences of work. We will focus on core questions around the characteristics and conditions of work and occupations that shape the experience of the self-concept and identity—including classic themes about job control, autonomy, challenge, complexity, and authority. Other features of the course will include the ways that interpersonal dynamics and organizational structures shape individual psychological and social experiences both at work and beyond the boundaries of the workplace. We will also address important questions about the aspects of health, well-being, and quality of life as they relate to the social psychology of work.
