One Course Instructor Position

SOC350H1S - New Topics in Sociology: Sociology of Violence

From gangs to genocide, we will explore global patterns of violence and how they have changed over the past century. When do individuals engage in violence? How do groups and states use, condone, and even organize violence? And what sorts of social structures create protections against violence, or even help to end cycles of violence? Have our methods for addressing violence kept up with the ways in which violence has changed? Drawing from literatures in sociology, psychology, and political science, we will explore these questions and more.
