The Department of Sociology at the St. George Campus seeks 1 Course Instructor for the following course:

SOC351H1F – LEC0101 – NEW TOPICS IN SOCIOLOGY: GENDER INEQUALITY IN THE KNOWLEDGE ECONOMY

Despite increased awareness of gender issues in the workplace and workplace diversity initiatives, gender inequality in the workplace remains. This course situates this ongoing discussion of why gender inequality persists in our current “knowledge-based” economy. We begin the course by discussing what a “knowledge economy” means and examining how this type of economy has transformed the way people work. After establishing how work is organized in a knowledge economy, we then introduce theories of gender and work to engage in a critical discussion of why gender inequality persists in this new kind of work culture. Then, we discuss the consequences gender inequality for knowledge production and evaluate potential solutions.
